

Mithilesh Dronavalli

Dr Mithilesh Dronavalli is a public health medicine registrar with the Australian Faculty of Public Health Medicine. He is currently based as a researcher at The Western Australian Centre for Rural Health (UWA) in Geraldton. Alongside a medical degree he has also obtained extensive training and qualifications in biostatistics and epidemiology. He holds a first class honours in biostatistics, a Master of Biostatistics and an MPhil in Epidemiology. Mithilesh has consulted on many projects involving the analysis of clinical data. He has experience in teaching scientists and clinicians research methods. He is a published author who has carried out many presentations on clinical research. He has also had some experience in mental health as a psychiatry registrar. Mithilesh was born in India, carried out schooling in Sydney and has lived in Australia for the last 24 years. He is currently enjoying his stay in Geraldton and is loving the experience of a regional town. He aims to be a public health physician specialising in the field of biostatistics and epidemiology. He will start his PhD in biostatistics next year at The University of Western Australia.