

Carol Holden

Dr Carol Holden is currently CEO of Andrology Australia (The Australian Centre of Excellence in Male Reproductive Health) www.andrologyaustralia.org. She is responsible for initiating and managing the first national men's health research project, as well as directing the development of evidence-based community education resources, clinical guidelines, national awareness campaigns and programs in Indigenous men's health. Carol gained her PhD in reproductive biology from Monash University in 1994, and was Monash IVF's operations manager until joining Andrology Australia at its inception in 1999. She has received a number of awards for her innovative work in men's health, including the Monash Faculty of Medicine Dean's Award for Excellence, which recognises contributions that exceed the normal requirements of the position. Published internationally, Carol has more than 15 years experience in male reproductive health education and research.