

Jessica Langham

Jessica Langham is a new graduate physiotherapist working in a small country town Macksville on the New South Wales coast. In her final year of university Jess undertook an honours project that was based in Tamworth, country NSW. Jess has a passion for rural health and a strong belief that health should be equal for all no matter where someone lives or their heritage. Jess would like to become a general therapist who is a jack of all trades and is able to best treat her patients no matter where she is working. Jess feels like she is truly blessed to be working in a rural town as she is working closely with other health professionals from doctors, dieticians through to exercise physiologists. Jess is thoroughly enjoying the rural lifestyle, helping those in her community and looking forward to further developing her skills to help those in her community.
