A new National Rural Health Strategy

Australia's current rural health strategy is based on a framework developed in 2011 that has never been evaluated or updated to reflect changing workforce demands, connectivity and service delivery.

7 million people in Australia have poorer health outcomes

Since 2011 there has been no demonstrable improvement in the health outcomes of rural people

No Plan = No Action

A new National Rural Health Strategy will guide and assist organisations and governments engaged in planning, funding and delivering health services in rural, regional and remote Australia.

The National Rural Health Alliance is asking an incoming Government to commit to creating a new National Rural Health Strategy ($2m) that includes targets for improving access to health services, health promotion and for improving social determinants of health for rural people.

www.ruralhealth.org.au/election19 / #Vote1RuralHealth